

Escape Pod
The perfect tote for the
Friday getaway p90

Opening Remarks

8

A new U.S. law tries to protect poorer nations from the "resource curse." Why is Big Oil opposed? p8

Bloomberg View Paul Ryan and Paul Volcker; Greek voters are forcing Germany's hand p10

Global Economics

13

After Merkozy

Despite François Hollande's anti-austerity pitch, his pragmatism may surprise Angela Merkel

China's designs on Japan	p14
A hiring binge at hotels	p16
Tom Keene's EconoChat	p17
Syria's besieged economy	p18
The week ahead	p20
Charlie Rose/Larry Summers	p23

Companies & Industries

25

US Airways' lofty plans

It's much smaller than American Airlines, but that may not keep it from completing a takeover

Board games are going to the movies	p26
Testosterone's on a roll	p27
Nigerian shoppers keep London's stores busy	p28
Briefs	p30

Politics & Policy

33

Patent troll crackdown

The Supreme Court and the White House rein in patent owners who file frivolous cases

Online grave robbers in search of tax refunds	p35
The U.S. Navy plans a fleet of underwater drones	p36
Jocks vs. suits in the fundraising race for the White House	p37

Technology

39

Hollywood loves Apple

Its various iDevices keep making cameos because of relationships other brands can only envy

Yahoo's still selling ads	p40
Camera apps: A family tree	p41
Safeguarding smartphones	p42
Free software's sugar daddy	p44
Innovator: Daniela Rus and her miniature robots	p46

Markets & Finance

49

Where are the trades?

Volume at public stock exchanges is plummeting as trading shifts to unregulated dark pools

Investors pile into bank-loan funds despite the risks	p51
States' pension gambles	p51
London's Russian IPOs	p52
Facebook: Spoiler alert!	p53
Bid & Ask: The week's deals	p54

Energy

57

Big Oil's green push

In the global race for renewable energy, Exxon, Shell, and BP have become major players in biofuels

Chattanooga's investment in radio-operated streetlamps	p58
As consumers balk at smart meters, utilities push back	p60
More biofuel IPOs are slated, but investors are losing interest	p62

Spillover Protesters outside Chevron's Rio headquarters p64

Features

64

Over a Barrel

How a relatively minor oil spill turned Chevron into a pariah in Brazil and obscured the nation's struggle to tap its newfound reserves p64

Our Data, Ourselves

Startup Diaspora has overcome tragedy to create a different kind of social network—one where you continue to own whatever you post p72

$34 Billion and Counting

Jeffrey Gundlach's DoubleLine Capital is attracting more than $80 million a day. So who is this bond savant who left TCW on really bad terms? p78

Etc.

85

High-Noon Ravers

Europeans are dancing up a sweat at booze-free, lunch-hour "nightclubs." And the trend is headed for the U.S.

Branding Luxury automakers are hoping extreme test drives will help persuade you to sign on the line	p88
The One An all-in-one weekend tote that goes from office to beach in style	p90
Politics Here's to Hillary: The Secretary of State is finally learning how to be cool	p91
Behavior Your workplace may be more erotically charged than you think	p92
The Stack Mark Kurlansky's Birdseye pins down the adventures of the peripatetic nose-to-tail locavore who got rich giving us the frozen pea	p94
Hard Choices Producer Jerry Weintraub recalls the film that put his life in jeopardy	p96