

Chocolate Dropouts
A brother and sister go from
Bush to candy p90

Opening Remarks

5

Ireland's mess shows why governments need to start writing down debt. Lenders disagree, but reductions in principal now look like the best route back to economic health

Global Economics

9

Rich—and unsung—cities
Marketers take aim at newly affluent centers in China, Brazil, and India that few foreigners know

A Russian nuclear upswing	p11
A dark economic forecast	p11
Why Japan's cigarette sales are suddenly on fire	p13
Tom Keene: Chris Christie	p13
Charlie Rose: Mongolia PM	p14
Seven Days Ahead	p16

Companies & Industries

19

Buick: Youth regained
The brand was nearly killed in 2009. Now, it's finding younger fans, and sales are up 60 percent

Africa: The new dealmakers' paradise	p20
How Macy's 810 U.S. stores cater to local tastes	p21
Southwest's growth gambit	p22
Harley's feminine side	p25
Briefs	p26

Politics & Policy

29

Tale of two TARP's
The $700 billion rescue package will, in the end, cost $50 billion or less. Yet it remains politically toxic

The Republicans' starve-the-beast plan for Obamacare	p30
Washington's sweetest gig?	p31
State races, corporate cash	p32
Rich and poor: A wider gap	p33
The inflatable-rat test case	p34

Technology

37

Table stakes
Restaurant reservation booker OpenTable is treading on Groupon's surf 'n' turf

Putting NeuroSky's mindreading technology in the movies	p39
Apple's rapid gains in the U.S. advertising market	p40
Can RIM's forthcoming tablet put a dent in the iPad?	p41
A gambling man at Cantor	p41

Markets & Finance

43

Duped by derivatives
Are retail investors who buy structured notes being taken for a ride by Wall Street?

Banks' faulty foreclosures may prolong the housing slump	p44
Macquarie's strategic shift	p45
Vanguard leapfrogs Fidelity	p46
Ivy endowment overreach	p47
Michael Lewis: Prop trading	p48
Bid & Ask: The week's deals	p50

Risk Management

53

Commodity shock
Extreme price volatility is leading companies to take strategic steps that go way beyond hedging

Canada's new claim to fame: Financial risk master	p54
Commuter beware	p54
Where Lloyd's of London sees the next big threats	p55
The new upside-down rules of investment risk	p56

Berlin Helmut Kohl at the Reichstag p61

Profile: Germany

59

Twenty years after reunification, Germany is the wheelhouse of Europe, driving regional growth, safeguarding stability, and often footing the bills. An in-depth look at the uneasy but fruitful marriage of east and west.

Reunification How did two Germanys become one?	p61
Leadership Chancellor Angela Merkel's political power—and peril	p67
The Economy Almost alone, Germany keeps its workforce working	p72
Investing Why a mere 6 percent of Germans own stocks	p77
Saxony Behind the rise of the east's industrial star	p77
Q & A Siemens CEO Peter Löscher on how to capitalize on "a good crisis"	p79
Ethnic Tension What does it feel like to be a Turk in Germany?	p80
Doing Business in Germany How not to embarrass yourself	p82

Etc.

85

Return of the Three-Martini Lunch
Whether as a complement to the food or a business lubricant, booze at midday meals is back

Navigator From spas to 24-hour screening rooms, airports are wooing customers with some seriously luxurious amenities	p88
Next Life The brother and sister team that left the White House to be chocolatiers	p90
Hands On Looxie is a videocam that you wear like a Bluetooth earpiece	p91
Art Jewelry with a story to tell is increasingly being viewed as art—and investment	p92
The Stack Is Michael Blanding's The Coke Machine meaner than it ought to be?	p94
Hard Choices Houston's Annise Parker, America's first openly gay big-city mayor, on the death threats and her struggles to adapt to public life	p96