

Bloomberg Businessweek

Contents

April 26 — May 2, 2010
Bloomberg Businessweek

History Lesson
Financial disasters through the ages — p18

Opening Remarks

13

When the spectacle of Lloyd Blankfein's Senate grilling fades, the reforms needed to prevent financial chicanery will still be elusive. Plus: How the SEC investigation changes Wall Street.

Global Economics

17

Iraq's economy stirs

Investment and consumption show signs of life as oil production ramps up

- After the volcano — p18
- Greece: An IMF's-eye view — p19
- Obituary: C.K. Prahalad — p20
- Drought in China — p20
- IDs for 1 billion Indians — p23
- Following the yuan — p24
- Tom Keene's EconoChat — p24

Companies & Industries

27

Gene therapy

Recent successes give drugmakers and patients hope for new treatments

- Pepsi's green machines — p28
- Deere comes up short — p29
- A new frontier for luxury — p30
- The Times vs. the Journal — p30
- A Fiat heir's breakup plan — p31
- Tang's second rocket ride — p32
- In Brief — p34

On the stump
Whitman in Redondo
Beach — p80

Policy & Politics

36

Corporate giving

Why the Supreme Court ruling on ad spending hasn't yet opened the floodgates

- Signs of trouble for Wall Street lobbyists — p38
- Charlie Rose talks with Rahm Emanuel — p41
- Reshuffle in Obama Land? — p42
- Some docs need a raise — p44

Technology

47

Zynga and Facebook

The startup can keep growing as long as it stays in the social network's good graces

- A few bumps for iPad — p48
- How Vizio beat Sony — p51
- Tech's pile of cash — p51
- Bye BlackBerry trackball — p52
- Did Activision frag itself? — p53
- Innovator: Fred Brooks — p54

Markets & Finance

57

Sticking with Goldman

The feds may have a beef with the investment bank, but its clients are staying put

- "Fabulous Fab" to testify — p58
- Corporate debt fears fade — p59
- A French fund star — p59
- Russian bonds are back — p60
- Box office speculation — p60
- Private equity in fashion — p61
- Bullish on AIG — p62

Enterprise

65

The Ben & Jerry's law

Companies may soon have legal cover to put principles before profit—even after going public

- Small biz export fears — p66
- Inner-city bankers — p70
- IRS targets permalancers — p74
- A health-reform primer — p74
- Best cities for startups — p76
- Still gloomy on Main St. — p76
- Boulder's tech success — p78

Features

80

Organized Chaos

Meg Whitman says she wants to govern a state that shows few signs of being governable — p80

Apple's Endlessly Expanding Universe

Developers are queuing up to deliver new apps, despite increasingly restrictive rules — p92

The City That Got Swapped

A French mayor's novel plan to pay for urban renewal worked great—until the crash — p100

Cooking With Gas

Hardscrabble billionaire Isaac Tshuva could be Israel's energy savior — p109

Etc.

117

Hitmen for Hire

The best company softball team in the country is all work and no play. Plus: A world without ringers

- A Free Day in Houston The city has more to offer than sprawl and humidity — p120
- Work Drug Coffee isn't the only way to get your caffeine rush — p122
- Wealth How to tap into Asia's rising consumer class — p124
- Hands On 3D TV is coming. What to look for as the first sets hit stores — p127
- Next Life From clawing equities at Citi to rescuing rare tigers in India — p128
- One True Thing An office sneaker that still puts your best foot forward — p133
- The Stack Last Call: The Rise and Fall of Prohibition by Daniel Okrent — p133
- Hard Choices Retiring Xerox Chairman Anne Mulcahy on knowing when to go — p136