

Baby bling
Making the rug rat feel very, very special p89

Opening Remarks

8

Attacks are inevitable. Americans possess the tools and resilience to defeat them

Bloomberg View EU banking needs a German buy-in; China takes the lead on bird flu p10

Global Economics

12

Australia's muscular buck
Prime Minister Gillard's constituents are losing faith as a strong currency hammers manufacturing

China's shale-gas potential p13
Turkish designers make Muslim fashion hip p14
A Thai rice subsidy backfires p15
Let 1,000 jokes bloom p16
The week ahead p17

Companies & Industries

19

Pile on the fat and goo
Fast-food restaurants, eager to woo young male diners, are going to extremes on their menus

Why Dish Network's Charlie Ergen craves Sprint p21
Chevron's lawyers get tough in an oil spill case p22
Briefs: A revenue squeeze for banks; Twitter's TV play p23

Politics & Policy

25

The courtship of Airbus
How Alabama wooed Boeing's European rival with millions in cash and tax breaks

Targeting Roe v. Wade p26
A gaffe upends debt debate p27
Health exchange inflation p27
A green governor for Pennsylvania? p28
Gun control goes down p29

Technology

31

Dweebs go Hollywood
Top-flight coders are in demand and using agents to command top dollar

LinkedIn wants you to visit often and stay longer p32
Will smartphones revive a fallen Indian Web star? p33
Innovator: Using brain waves to block unwanted calls p34

Markets & Finance

36

Lotta Value, private eye
Put down that annual report—Loews tells investors its story in a comic book

The U.K. may crack down on foreign tycoons p37
Paulson still believes in gold p38
Rate rigging redux p38
Wealth is women's work p39
Bid/Ask: A gold shirt p40

MBA

43

The switch is on
More and more B-school grads are changing careers—a telling sign of an improving job market

MBA salaries: The U.S. lags p44
Cribbing that admission essay? p44
Software may nab you p44
Summertime, when the MBA startups are blossoming p46
The toughest B-school ever p48

Last laugh What scandals? Murdoch presses on p58

Features

58

I'm Still Here

Two years ago, Rupert Murdoch was supposed to be finished. Instead, his News Corp. is stronger—and more valuable—than ever. How'd he do it? p58

War and Peace Among the Geeks

Eve Online, a sci-fi computer game from Iceland, has the most fanatical bunch of fee-paying players in the universe p64

Robbing Banks for the CIA

The government offered him $25,000 to hold up banks, says Herson Torres. Could this part-time laborer for Target be telling the truth? p70

Etc.

83

Keith McNally Brings the Brasserie to Britain

Having conquered New York, the British restaurateur recreates his iconic Balthazar in London

Fashion Pastel polos for men—even in the workplace p86
Rant Apologizing doesn't help your cause. Sorry p88
Retail Is the right product for your baby a $1,000 stroller or a $600 Greenguard-certified crib? The luxury toddler market is back p89
Conspicuous Consumption Disconnect is a film about the dark side of the Internet that fails to connect p90
Hard Choices European Commission President José Barroso on managing 27 countries with competing interests p92