ON THE COVER

Fickle fate

SEM images of the mechanosensory organs ('hair') on the back of wild-type fruit flies (left). Disruption of asymmetric Sara endosome segregation in a sensitized mutant background changes the fate of stem cells producing these bristles and the back of the fly is then naked (right). During asymmetric division, central spindle asymmetry is generated by the kinesin Klp10A and its antagonist Patronin, which in turn polarizes the direction of endosome motility.
