

NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC

APRIL 2015 • VOL. 227 • NO. 4

Men dressed as devils gather each year near the Hornocal Mountains to celebrate the Pachamama ceremony.

130 Proof | Argentine Identities

A photographer glimpses many cultures in the faces of the country's people.

Story and Photographs by Marco Veraschi

30

Lincoln

Along the train route that his body traveled home, people debate Lincoln's legacy.

By Adam Goodheart
Photographs by Eugene Richards

A Lincoln Gallery

Photos show the struggles of the nation etched into the president's face.

62

Hubble's Greatest Hits

After 25 years on the job, the Hubble Space Telescope stands as "one of the world's most productive and popular scientific machines."

By Timothy Ferris

76

How Coal Fuels India's Insurgency

Militants capitalize on human poverty amid mineral wealth.

By Anthony Loyd
Photographs by Lynsey Addario

96

The Bug That's Eating the Woods

A warming climate is good for pine beetles—which is very bad for forests.

By Hillary Rosner
Photographs by Peter Essick

116

Trajan's Amazing Column

On a pillar of Carrara marble, an emperor's exploits tower over Rome.

By Andrew Curry
Photographs by Kenneth Garrett

On the Cover This soaring pinnacle within the Carina Nebula is located 7,500 light-years away.
Image: NASA; ESA; M. Livio; Hubble Heritage Team, STScI. Colorized composite/mosaic

Corrections and Clarifications
Go to ngm.com/more.

OFFICIAL JOURNAL OF THE NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC SOCIETY