

To escape the fierce tropical sun on the Seychelles atoll of Aldabra, giant tortoises take shelter under any available foliage, in layers if necessary.

82 Return of the Seychelles

Ecological restoration gives nature a second chance in this Indian Ocean island nation.

By Kennedy Wame Photographs by Thomas P. Peschak

30

Waste Not, Want Not

About a third of the planet's food goes to waste—some because it's not picture-perfect.

By Elizabeth Royte
Photographs by Brian Fiske

56

The Cold Rush

With howling winds and subzero temperatures, even a melting Arctic is a brutal place to work.

By Joel K. Bourne, Jr.
Photographs by Evgenia Arbugaeva

102

The Other Iraq

Kurds in northern Iraq have created an oasis of prosperity and peace. Will ISIS destroy it?

By Neil Shea
Photographs by Yuri Kazirev

124 Proof | Tsunami Memories

Survivors of Japan's 2011 tsunami pose amid remnants of their flooded-out lives.

By Jeremy Berlin Photographs by Alejandro Chaskielberg

On the Cover The large amount of U.S. food that's wasted includes produce that is "perfectly edible even if it's less cosmetically attractive," says the Natural Resources Defense Council. Photo by Hans Gilsinger

Corrections and Clarifications Go to ngm.com/more.